

REMARKS

Applicant submits the definitions of the words “stud” and “post” as set forth in the attached exhibits. Generally, the definitions are available online at the sites indicated at the bottom of each exhibit and many of the definitions may be easily found at the site www.onelook.com. This evidence was not previously presented as, until the final Office Action dated November 28, 2007, the Examiner had not indicated that the general definition for these words would be used as opposed to the definition of these words as used by those skilled in the art of construction.

It is noted that the Examiner contends that a “post” is “a piece of wood or metal, etc., usually long and square or cylindrical, set upright to support a building, sign, grate, etc: pillar or pole ...” and that a “stud” is “column, pillar, post ... to prop, support....” The Examiner further notes that the claims must be given the broadest reasonable interpretation. Applicant agrees with the Examiner’s statement of the law, but not the application thereof.

As set forth at MPEP §2111, “Claims are not to be read in a vacuum, and limitations therein are to be interpreted in light of the specification in giving them their ‘broadest reasonable interpretation.’” Citing, In re Marosi, 710 F.2d 799, 802, 218 USPQ 289, 292 (quoting In re Okuzawa, 537 F.2d 545, 548, 190 USPQ 464, 466 (CCPA 1976)) (emphasis in original). However, it is further noted that, “[T]he ordinary and customary meaning of a claim term is the meaning that the term would have to a person of ordinary skill in the art in question at the time of the invention, i.e., as of the effective filing date of the patent application.” Phillips v. AWH Corp., 415 F.3d 1303, 1313, 75 USPQ2d 1321, 1326 (Fed. Cir. 2005) (en banc). Further, in construing claim terms, the general meanings gleaned from reference sources, such as dictionaries, must always be compared against the use of the terms in context, and the intrinsic record must always be consulted to identify which of the different possible dictionary meanings is most consistent with the use of the words by the inventor. ACTV, Inc. v. The Walt Disney Company, 346 F.3d 1082, 1092, 68 USPQ2d 1516, 1524 (Fed. Cir. 2003). Thus, if extrinsic reference sources, such as dictionaries, evidence more than one definition for the term, the intrinsic record must be consulted to identify which of the different possible definitions is most consistent with applicant's use of the terms. Brookhill-Wilk 1 v. Intuitive Surgical, Inc., 334 F. 1294, 1300, 67 USPQ2d 1132,1137.

In this application, the Examiner has utilized one of several dictionary definitions without regard to the subject matter of the application. That is, the Examiner has recited a dictionary definition that may be used by a typical “person in the street” rather than the definition used by those skilled in the art of construction. As set forth in the previously submitted Affidavit of Robert Delorenzo (copy submitted with the Response filed October 5, 2006), those skilled in the art of construction have specific definitions of the words “stud” and “post” that are more narrow than the general definition. This distinction is also noted in the attached definition of the word “post” from the dictionary Encarta. That is, Encarta notes a general definition of a “post” as “upright pole: a pole of wood or metal fixed in the ground in an upright position, serving as a support, marker, or place for attaching things.” This definition is generally consistent with the definition provided by the Examiner. However, Encarta further notes that in the field of “construction” the word “post” has a more specific definition, “construction upright frame part: a vertical piece in a building frame that supports a beam.” The latter definition, i.e. the one relating to construction, just as the present application relates to construction, is consistent with the definition provided by Robert Delorenzo. Accordingly, the Examiner has failed to look to “the intrinsic record... to identify which of the different possible definitions is most consistent with applicant's use of the terms.”

This definition, as well as the others, shall be used in the Appeal Brief to demonstrate that the Examiner’s use of general definitions without regard to the context of the present application is in error and violates the law as set forth in, inter alia, Brookhill-Wilk 1.

A Notice of Appeal is filed concurrently herewith.

Respectfully submitted,
